Can breakfast be fun? Looking at this truly weird kitchen gadget one would say it definitely can. No matter if you're running out of ideas about how to make your kids' breakfast funnier or just want to add something new to your first meal of the day, the Frying Gun Egg Stencil is one of the elite choices. Now, we're a bit confused about the gun shape and still haven't found too many reasons for such a choice - one could be a cowboy-themed sandwich or breakfast. This stencil will let you fry your eggs while keeping a strict control over their shape: no more irregularities with your cooking as nothing will be left to drift across the pan. One cool thing about this Frying Gun Egg Stencil is that it can also be used to cut pastry and cookies so you get more than one use for it. And if you're thinking about going 3D in a more obvious way, then you could scramble some eggs and mix them with other things then pour the mix in the pan and let this stencil create a more realistic six-shooter. You also get a small handle to lift the Frying Gun Egg Stencil while it is hot and this adds serious functionality to it, because you can better use it in multiple takes. The stencil is made from stainless steel and it also looks like it is dishwasher safe, so, despite its apparent weirdness, it will find its natural place in your kitchen arsenal. The price is a bargain as it comes at a very cool \$4.3 (originally priced in Australian Dollars). Still we're not sure whether the Frying Gun Egg Stencil will cross the oceans and be available in other countries, but this would be cool indeed. And you can now throw the dish on the table and grin: "now you're fried!" Bon appetite! We are just a few, but there are many of you, Softpedia users, out there.
