

By: Elgr207alan, Communications News Editor

Bloody "God of War: Betrayal" Game Showed in Video

A peek at how the game looks like

For those who like to see blood spilling and battles leading to carnages, there's a mobile phone version too for the "God of War: Betrayal" game. It has been recently released, but YouTube has now a video to show everybody what kind of entertainment it is capable of providing. "God of War: Betrayal" is not a game for the weak-hearted. The one minute video fully shows this, as blood spills everywhere as the player moves on and takes the battle challenges of the game. It is a warning for some, whereas others may see in the video all the reasons they needed for buying it. The huge amount of bloody scenes is what makes the PC version of "God of War: Betrayal" look as real as it does. The same goes for the mobile phone one, although on smaller screens and with some technical drawbacks. Still, moving from 3D gaming to the 2D one occurred with the least effects in the game's action. The character's moves look extremely vivid and realistic, just as the fighting scenes do. The number of available moves is considerably large and the blood spill will quench anybody's thirst for this type of action. The combat is considerably simplified when compared to the PC version of the game, as to make it easier for playing on a small keypad. "God of War: Betrayal" proves to be one of the most challenging action games available on mobile phones at this time. The scenes which follow the defeat of an enemy when the player has the chance to rip the opponent apart and the overall intense action set this game at a considerable distance from others. The video of the game shows a shocking blood spill. If this is not the reason for this game to catch one's interest, then it must be the intense and realistic battle scenes. "God of War: Betrayal" is available at Verizon Wireless on a daily or monthly subscription.