

12 June 2006

By: Elena Gorgan, Entertainment News Editor

Britney's Marriage Is Not on the Rocks!

The artist says she has no intention of getting a divorce

Shockingly enough, Britney Spears is not separating from her husband Kevin Federline. At least, this is the new official version... During an interview with Matt Lauer that will be aired this Thursday on NBC, the tearful and whining pop princess asked the world to stop harassing her. Apparently, the paparazzi make her feel like 'a target', telling deformed versions of her true marital life and making her 'a true emotional wreck'. Well, Brit, what did you expect when you started selling all those albums? To be left alone? It seems that, despite the fact she has been lately linked to her male nanny, the Spears-Federline marriage is actually doing great, 'awesome'. There are no intentions to split up and especially on her side, as she needs Kevin's support to help her get through this difficult moment. To Britney, the media has 'crossed the line', inventing all those lies, following her and taking pictures of her in private moments. She is also mad for the allegations that she is not a good mother for her first child, Sean. 'I know I'm a good mum', Britney answered when people were horrified to see her driving a car with the baby on her lap. 'I did it with my dad', she added, right before saying that she can't go anywhere without people judging her. We say: give it another week, and then we'll see how all this ends!