Creative Muvo T100 Faces Identity Crisis! Lacks Both Screen and Personality...

And no, it is not available on the market, yet

Dear Creative fans, I am happy to inform you that your favorite company has just released the Muvo T100 MP3 player. The biggest surprise of all, the newly released Mp3 player is totally screenless. And beside minimizing its design, the manufacturers managed to keep the same button layout and some of the features they used when developing the Zen Stone player, not so long ago. Between the two players, the only noticeable difference is in the Muvo T100's form factor and its smartly built-in USB plug. In fact, the entire Mp3 player resembles a standard USB flash drive. Not to mention it also doubles as one, when the user wants it, using a MSC transfer protocol. As for its capabilities, the Creative T100 Muvo player can deal with the most popular formats, such as Mp3 and WMA audio formats, as well as Audible audio book formats. To make it even better, the Muvo T100 built-in battery was rated at up to 10 hours battery life, but it can also be recharged via USB. It comes in 6 different colors to suit all sorts of tastes, just like the Zen Stone player. Regarding its design, it features a thumbdrive feature and allows content transfer without the need of a separate cable. All in all, the MuVo T100 player seems to have been designed for sports addicted teenagers who enjoy both Mp3 player and storage device for useful school infos, in a single device. Sadly, as much as you'd want to buy one of these babies, it is only available in Singapore, where it sells for 90SGD and 150 SGD, meaning 60 and 100 bucks, respectively, for either 2GB or 4Gb storage capacity versions. Hopefully, it will hit some other markets by the end of the year. I have to admit I had higher expectations... We are just a few, but there are many of you, Softpedia users, out there.
