Flexibility and mobility

Employing "flexibility" and "mobility" as key words, designer David Granath and Danish Designit team have managed to bring another breath of fresh air in the world of loudspeakers that combine sound with interior design capabilities. The new gadget is a wonderful a fresh concept and comes with a new approach to portable sound in the homely perimeter of your office or residence.

However, in the case of this contraption there was nothing lost from the idea of personal sound, as some of you might be expecting - the speakers boast an incredible versatility when it comes to re-arranging your living space. There is something retro in the way Designit's speakers look. Their smooth and fluid shapes resemble the lamps hanging from the ceilings during the late 60's, yet they also have a touch of high-tech modernism about them.

One of the coolest things about the Designit concept speakers is the amazing modularity - you can use these sound sources as individual speakers or in stereo, and even in surround arrays, according to your needs or mood.

Moreover, you will surely enjoy the complete freedom Bluetooth streaming technology gives you. Just place these devices across the room as you want, and have them wirelessly connected to your Bluetooth-enabled PC, WLAN, iPod, and other similar music sources.

The speakers come with built-in rechargeable batteries, which can be directly plugged in any European wall socket, or in the special-design cables created by David Granath and the Designit team especially for this purpose. Furthermore, the even cooler thing is that the cables can actually be hanged from the ceiling in the desired places, ready to receive a speaker and spread your fav music throughout the room.

There is no word on availability, let alone pricing. Nevertheless, the speakers Designit and David Granath have given birth to are bound to be a major hit among all the home decor-aware individuals and those who like to experiment with their music at home.
