The giant publisher also launches its first ad-supported title, Lemonade Tycoon

EA Mobile has announced the availability of six new game titles on the iTunes App Store, which include Star Trek, American Idol, and Trivial Pursuit. EA Mobile is the world's biggest wireless entertainment publisher.

"EA Mobile games have consistently been top performers in the App Store's Top Paid rankings and their revenue performance has been even more impressive," Adam Sussman, vice president of Worldwide Publishing for EA Mobile, said. "We are excited to expand our offerings to include these six new games, joining our all-time top-selling apps, including MONOPOLY Here & Now: World Edition, Tetris and the recently released Need for Speed Undercover and Tiger Woods PGA TOUR."

Talking about Star Trek in particular, "EA Mobile invites you to become the captain of the U.S.S. Enterprise and fight against the Klingons, Cardassians and Vulcans in an all new space adventure for iPhone and iPod touch," the company states. "Based on the world famous Star Trek franchise, the game coincides with the release of the latest movie directed by J.J. Abrams."

Besides Star Trek, American Idol, Trivial Pursuit, Pandemonium and Anytime Pool, EA Mobile also has a free, ad-supported game called Lemonade Tycoon. This is actually the company's first ad-supported title for iPhone and iPod touch, where players manage their lemonade business from location choice, recipe selection, advertising decisions and staff selection.

EA Mobile is also responsible for what is probably the best racing game to ever hit the iPhone and iPod touch, Need for Speed Undercover. Use the links below to check out EA Mobile's latest additions to the iTunes App Store.
