

By Arbogast Popa, Security and Search Engines Editor

FREE 80GB Video iPod Offered by Google!

For AdWords publishers

Google AdWords is one of the most popular advertising platforms on the Internet and is tending to become even more powerful by announcing an attractive feedback campaign. It seems like the company released a private AdWords survey form that requires users to provide feedback messages to help the company improve the advertising solution. According to gSpy, the search giant provides an 80GB Video iPod prize to one of the publishers that send feedback to Google. "Today, I received an email from AdWords Team telling me to fill out a survey form which could win me a 80GB iPod Video. Owing to the agreements in the email, I could not reveal what the survey is exactly about. It is mainly about how effective AdWords is and comparing a few advertising channels both online and offline," the blogger said. At this time, the 80GB Video iPod can be brought for $349, being the largest audio device ever designed by Apple. The specifications of the iPod are quite impressive because it is able to play music, podcast, audiobooks, photos, TV shows, movies, videos and games. According to the parent company Apple, the 80GB iPod is able to store up to 20.000 songs so I guess you really want it. At this time, the iPod offered by Google for the AdWords publishers has the largest storage size ever implemented into this kind of device. Google is the company that owns Gmail, the mail solution with the largest storage size on the Internet, excepting Yahoo Mail that was recently improved with infinite storage size. So, the companies that own the products with the largest storage size in their category are now part of the same deal, helping Google improve the most popular advertising platform on the Internet.