Actress Gwyneth Paltrow recently confessed she's glad she left from America and moved to Europe, because she thinks it's a safer environment for her baby daughter Apple. Paltrow, who gave birth to her first child, Apple Blythe Alison Martin, on May 14, 2004, with husband Chris Martin, confessed that Bush's anti-environment, pro-war policies are a disgrace for America, which already was a dangerous place to live. She tells PageSix.com: "I've always been drawn to Europe. America is such a young country, with an adolescent swagger about it. But I feel that I have a more European sensibility, a greater respect for the multicultural nature of the globe." She tells the New York Daily News: "I just had a baby and thought, 'I don't want to live there.' Bush's anti-environment, pro-war policies are a disgrace."
