

20 June 2005

By:

Iraqi Kamikaze Volunteers Recruited from European Countries

Many of the Islamic militant networks have been recruiting kamikaze members from European countries in the past months, according to recent analysis

Recent search on the identity of the suicide bombers blamed for the latest attacks in Iraq revealed that Islamic militant networks have been recruiting kamikaze members from European countries in the past months. Even though countries from Northern Africa, Asia and Middle East provide most kamikaze volunteers, the 21 active Islamic networks from Europe are believed to have become stronger in the past few months, according to The Observer. The Muslims bearing a European passport travel easier and are described as technical schools graduates who can easily talk several languages. Most of them are thought to be married. The portrait of the European kamikaze is that of middle class man between 25 and 30, without a strong religious education, keen on entering a group of friends who can share his feelings of isolation and frustration.