James Brown Believes Men Should Control Women

'Women must know their limitations'

The Godfather of soul music continues to make a fool of himself in his personal life. But we already have gotten used to it by now. You would think... Immediately after talking about his upbringing in a brothel and the good that such a childhood did to him, Brown didn't miss the opportunity of sharing with the rest of the world his views on how society should be organized. It seems that the troubled singer is still living back in the ice age, being totally convinced that 'women must know their limitations' just as men must always know their obligations. The singer responded to his former wives' accusations that he is a violent husband and a batterer, by simply adding that all the problems were a direct result of his wives' not knowing and respecting the rightful place that the Bible has assigned to them. He [Brown] is not guilty of any crime: 'once I've taken care of her like a queen, I'm not going to go along with so much'. Brown's police record is one of the longest rap sheet in the industry; his encounters with the law began as early as when he was 16 and continued until the present moment. He has been jailed several times, charges ranging from shotgun incident, assault, gunpoint rape, possession of illegal substances and domestic violence and battery. He certainly is the man to control women!
