Jeez, I Hardly Recognized You!

She can run but she cannot hide...

The same Moët & Chandon Fashion Tribute brought out gorgeous Scarlett Johansson for a night out. Other big stars also attended the festivities but none of them was as glamorous-looking and poorly disguised as the 'Black Dahlia' actress. Without being mean or anything I should say that if there's one person in the whole world who sucks at disguising more than Paris Hilton, that person is definitely Scarlett. I'm not saying that she's dressed in poor taste (that would be, considering her previous appearances on the red carpet, blasphemy), it's just that putting on a black dress and a mask doesn't mean that you're wearing a 'costume'. That was the only bad thing that I had to say about Scarlett. I don't know but, when it comes to fashion, I am beginning to develop a soft spot for her and it's all because she hardly does anything wrong. The point is that, this time too, Miss Johansson dressed impeccably, in a simple black dress, with a revealing back side. Another thing that deserves appreciation (I am now strictly referring to her taste in fashion) is that she is not that kind of woman who uses too much make-up. Sure, there's more stuff on her face that we can see but what we can see is not at all smeared over her face in exaggerated amounts. So, I am going to stop now with just a couple of final words regarding Scarlett: looking awesome?, totally; master of disguise?, not in this lifetime!
