The British supermodel launched her sixth collection for British High Street giant Topshop today

Kate Moss' sixth collection for British High Street giant Topshop launches today and it is set to become as much of a success as the supermodel's past forays into the fashion world. Moss designed the present collection to reflect her own lifestyle and wardrobe, in keeping with this summer's hottest trends. The "High Summer" collection features an impressive variety of dresses, ranging from colorful print designs all the way to the must-have 50's style "prom" frock, as well as embroidered feather prints and ruffles, tiny hotpants, kaftans, blouses and printed jackets. The Kate Moss collection is young and vibrant, with a definite emphasis on femininity and comfort. It reflects the supermodel's own Bohemian luxury lifestyle and it is diverse enough to offer a lovely experience for most modern women. The flouncy minidresses will definitely enthrall the twenty-something among us, while the flowery prints (such as the must-have red pansy print dresses) and the light cotton fabrics used for most items will keep us all feeling young at heart, comfortable and attractive. Prices for the items in Kate's Bohemian collection range from $20 for a vest to about $300 for a premium dress. Although there were no crowds to take the Topshop flagship store in London's Oxford Street by storm this year, Kate's collection is expected to literally fly off the shelves. Reports are already coming in that in the first hour and a half after the London shop was open, two hundred of the red pansy print dresses had already been sold. Unlike the previous Kate Moss collections for Topshop, this one can also be bought online, with officials expecting a surge in the number of page views on the store's website.
