

19 August 2006

By: Silviu Stahie, Video and PC Games Editor

Lexicon Announce 'Daemon Vector'

Busy acquisition week for the newcomer

Lexicon Entertainment have announced their 3rd product in the last week by snapping up 3rd person action adventure 'Daemon Vector' on PC for Benelux, Portugal, Spain, UK, France and other small territories. A distribution deal with a French publisher is in final stages and hopes to be completed after upcoming show in Leipzig. Scheduled for a Q1 2007 release, 'Daemon Vector' offers the player an all action adventure which is graphically gorgeous and Lexicon are hoping the price point will encourage UK retail to support the product. Superb combos, online scoring, free camera adjustment and loads of weapon upgrades with breathtaking combos. Lexicon is pushing to be a player in the market with their recent announcements and is currently looking for a US distribution partner for upcoming DS product 'Chronos Twins' which was recently announced. With 4 DS products in the pipeline for Q1 and Q2 2007 Lexicon are ensuring that there is a new independent British publisher ready to take advantage of the market by offering quality products to the end user. "We are constantly looking for new product on all platforms and now we have 3 quality products for Q4 2006 and 2 for Q1 2007. On top of this we also have our distribution network within Europe that is blossoming continuously. We have had huge success with 'Bad Day: LA' in Europe and we are looking to publish in the UK ourselves, so at present we are looking to finalize distribution here" "Daemon Vector offers the gamer something a little different and great value for money" said Steven Bailey, Head of Export for Lexicon "It has great game play, terrific graphics and is suitable for casual gamers as well as hard core, so we are hitting all kinds of games players"