

9 January 2007

By: Bogdan Popa, Security and Search Engines Editor

Life Inside Google Is Really a Dream

The company is number one in 100 Best Companies to Work For top

Google is one of the largest internet companies, with a huge number of solutions and millions of visitors every day. Many users are talking about a job at Google, saying that this is one of the best jobs in the entire world. As you probably know, the Google employees are very happy with their jobs, receiving bonuses, promotions and even 20 percent of the work time for personal projects. Google is continuously looking for experienced engineers so, if you think you can be one of the lucky guys that are meant to work for Google, you should apply following this link. "We're looking for people with world-class skills who thrive in small, focused teams and high-energy environments, believe in the ability of technology to change the world, and are as passionate about their lives as they are about their work. We value talent and intelligence, group spirit and diversity, creativity and idealism. Does this sound like you? If so, there may be a place for you at Google," the search giant says about its employees. So, it's obvious that working for Google is really a dream. This fact is sustained by the CNNMoney that presented a top with the 100 Best Companies to Work For, having Google as a leader. The company also presented statistics about the search engine giant, mentioning that Google currently has 6.500 US employees and 3000 employees from outside the US. In the last year, the company hired 2.229 new persons selected from a total of 1.145.000 applicants. Fortune, the company that contributed for the top, said that Google is the leader because it offers "free meals, swimming spa, and free doctors onsite. Engineers can spend 20% of time on independent projects. Other than all the free stuffs, you can get $5,000 reward for buying a hybrid car, $2,000 for refering a friend to work at Google, and "up to $500 in takeout food to ease your first four weeks at home."