Mariah Carey's costume gave away during a concert, exposing the diva's breasts to the public. Mariah panicked, yelling at the organizer to do something, before someone could catch a glimpse of her. After a few seconds, someone turned off the lights, leaving the stage in darkness. Mariah told the spectators, joking: "Someone bring me a jacket or the show's off, we all know how quickly these images can spread around the world." After the lights went out, the pop singer ran backstage, with her hands holding her clothing in place to have the problem fixed before continuing the concert. Mariah was performing in Karlsruhe, Germany. Mariah Carey, born March 27, 1970 in Huntington, New York, is an American popular music singer, songwriter, record producer, music video director, philanthropist, diva and actress, who rose to prominence in the 1990s. Carey's music has been influenced by rhythm and blues, pop, gospel, hip hop, dance, and rock and roll. Surveys have placed Carey as one of the best-selling female recording artists ever worldwide. She was also the most successful artist of the 90s, according to Billboard magazine, and her singles have spent more weeks at #1 than any other living artist in Billboard history. Carey's vocal style influenced a generation of singers who came after her, including Christina Aguilera and Beyoncé Knowles as well as many American Idol competitors. (Wikipedia)
