Marilyn Monroe Grateful For Orgasm

In one of the transcripts from Dr. Ralph Greenson's tapes, Marilyn Monroe cried tears of joy after her first orgasm. On the 43rd anniversary of Marilyn Monroe's death (Aug. 5, 1962), former L.A. County prosecutor John Miner, now 86, released some transcripts of tape recordings the actress reportedly made for Dr. Ralph Greenson shortly before she died. The documents, which were believed to have been destroyed by Greenson, were obtained by the L.A. Times. Apparently, in one of the transcripts, Marilyn thanks Dr. Ralph Greenson for helping her to achieve powerful multiple-orgasms. It seems that Marilyn had been struggling to relax during sex, until she began counseling with the psychiatrist. She said, "Bless you doctor. What you say is gospel to me. By now I've had lots of orgasms. Not only one but two and three with a man who takes his time. I never cried so hard as I did afterwards. It was because of all the years I had never had one. What wasted years. How can I describe to you, a man, what it feels like to a woman? I'll try. Think of a light switch with a rheostat control (dimmer). As you begin to turn it on, the bulb begins to get bright, then brighter, and brighter and finally in a blinding flash is fully lit. It is so good... Doctor, I worship you."
