A juror from Michael Jackson trial claims the pop star has a detachable nose. Ray Hultman, 62, wrote in his upcoming book, "The Deliberator", that he was shocked when he first saw Michael, saying the singer looks like a "mummy with nostril holes" and that he has a detachable nose. According New York Post newspaper, Hultman wrote: "Up close, his appearance is amazing. He wears a black pageboy wig and his face is caked in white make-up, which hides the prosthesis that serves as the tip of his nose. One person who has seen him without the device says he resembles a mummy with nostril holes." Hultman and another juror declared after the trial ended they still believe pop star Michael Jackson is "guilty as sin" and plan to write a book about their deliberations. Eleanor Cook, 79, will call her book "Guilty As Sin, Free As A Bird", according to some reports. Ray Hultman, who said that he believed Jackson had probably molested boys, will call his book "The Deliberator".
