

By: November 2008, Mobile Editor

Mini Opera Taken to the Next Level

The 4.2 final version for mobiles released today

This is definitely the final version of the Mini Opera 4.2, mainly because tests have shown that, after the addition of a new Opera server park in the U.S., for the beta version of the earlier Mini Opera, American users have now 30% faster connections using this technology.

There are 90 language versions available for this new release, thus turning into a more than acceptable option for users in every corner of the Earth. Furthermore, it comes with plenty of new skins, so as to be customized in any way you like, with your lack of imagination standing as the only impediment in this case.

In addition to this, users can now sync to a certain degree their mobile Opera with the one on their PC using the Opera Link support. The increase in the operating speed will definitely boost this version's appeal and overall public reception.

Opera Mini is available for the latest version of the Android OS as well, becoming the first alternative to the Android. If you happen to be interested, learn that you can download it now and update your Opera System, in case you were using an earlier version.

Speaking of the recently released version, Jon von Tetzchner, Opera Software CEO, stated the following: "With Opera Mini 4.2, we are showing the world that Opera never gets complacent. We will always be improving our product, adding speed, new functionality and features, and ensuring that it is accessible by all. [...] Our support of the Android platform helps fulfill our mission to be available on more platforms, for more devices and reach more users, anywhere in the world."

Reports are showing that the number of Mini Opera users registered a mind-blowing increase, of over 490%, since October last year. As a result, its manufacturers (as they have shown with this version) will do their best to improve its features, and make it available for all interested users on the planet.