It appears that Playboy Playmate Nicole Narain denied selling the 15-minute sex tape with her and Colin Farrell and expressed her wish to talk to the actor to set things right, before suing him. Narain sustains she has no idea how the tape leaked into the media, and declares she wants to join forces with her ex-lover, Colin Farrell, to keep it from going public. She says, "I don't want it out there any more than Colin does. It was something that was made privately between me and him and it's just unfortunate that the situation is the way it is right now. We're both in the same boat... It's very unexpected. We both feel the same way - neither one of us want it out there." The lawsuit filed Monday in Superior Court by Colin Farrell to broker David Hans Schmidt, who plans to release the saucy film as a DVD, seeks general and compensatory damages. On 20 July, the judge has temporarily restrained the sex tape with Colin Farrell and Nicole Narain from selling, showing or distributing.
