Owen Wilson, about 'Boning' Kate Hudson

'Kiss and tell' works just fine for the Butterscotch Stallion

Responding to reports in the media claiming that Owen Wilson is the reason for which the marriage of Kate Hudson and Chris Robinson fell apart, the actor says that he did 'do' her, but that didn't mean anything. Wilson said over a phone conversation that he and Kate had sex on many occasions, a thing that the attractive actress often does when shooting for a film. But he insists that their having sex was not the reason for which her relationship to 'that guy in the Black Crowes' shipwrecked, as it was 'whack' even before he stepped in. But Wilson's allegations go beyond the issue of Hudson's infidelity, as he claims that even his brother had sex with her many a times. 'For sure I wasn't the first guy to kill time with Kate in her trailer between takes either. Hell, my brother boned that chick every day on the set of "Alex and Emma" four years ago, just like Matthew McConaughey did when he co-starred with Kate in "How to Lose a Guy in 10 Days"', Owen says. And he goes on to state that her easiness with fellow actors was the main reason that convinced him to do a movie ("You, Me and Dupree") with her: 'That's why I jumped at the chance to make "You, Me and Dupree" with her. Luke and Matthew told me about this thing she does with a scarf and a couple of ping pong balls. I just had to see that one for myself'. And, despite all the intimate things he says about Kate (if they are true), Owen is still best friends with his co-star. But he draws the line at what people are allowed to say, because he will sue the 'bejesus' of anybody else who dares to say that he is a homewrecker: 'Just don't say I blew up her marriage. It's one thing to ball a married chick, but it's another to say it means anything. That's tacky'.
