

22 November 2006

By: Iohana Georgescu, Communications News Editor

Samsung M610 to Be Available at Sprint

Sprint's 12mm Samsung in the slim-mobile era

The ultra-slim Samsung M610 will be available for Sprint subscribers and not only will it look good, but it will also be packing some pretty interesting features. It is thinner than RAZR, not that this really matters anymore, since slimmer phones are launched every day now. Equipped with an QVGA internal and OLED external display, 2 megapixel camera, EV-DO, Bluetooth 2.0 with Advanced Audio Distribution Profile and a Micro SD slot, M610 offers a lot, considering the fact that it's only 12mm thick. It will keep the friendly Samsung user interface instead of Sprint's UI, and will also feature a pair of stereo speakers for a more interesting mobile music experience and a document viewer that better handles various file formats. Overall, this handheld is really nice, although Samsung could have worked harder on the design. Nice and slim as it is, it would have needed something more to make it stand out amongst more and more very slim mobiles. So far, there is no info provided on this phone regarding pricing or availability.