Saucy Sex Toys Is What Some Macheads Really Want

That and the Air, of course

Steve Jobs and the company have some serious business planning to do. This year, Macworld revealed what Apple should deliver for its worldwide devotees in the nearby future. While some were there for the sole reason of preordering their own elusive MacBook Air, others wished for Apple to come up with saucy sex toys (for example) in the nearby future, having seen the potential of Apple consumer electronics. 16-year-old machead Josiah Wiebe from Manitoba, Canada, was interviewed by Wired News at the event. The young student is also a website developer who confirmed the MacBook Air as a show highlight, as far as he was concerned, adding that Macworld was "amazing" and that he would be coming again. This being Wiebe's first year as an attendee, when asked about his dream Apple product, he replied: "That's difficult - they've created everything I want already.... Maybe a vehicle with everything already integrated into it." Sure enough, by the time Josiah attends his second and third Macworld event, seeing more and more potential in Apple's products, his answers will probably be a bit more bold. The apple-equipped-vehicle does sound nice, doesn't it? Think about it. A Mac mini, iPhone, iPod touch and why not even a custom-built version of the AppleTV could easily be integrated into an environmental-friendly white car... No wait, scrub the environmental-friendly part. With all that hardware onboard, I doubt there would be any energy left to power up the actual car. But, it's a nice dream nonetheless. As for 28-year-old machead Rachael Fountain - teacher and product promoter residing in both Britain and San Francisco - according to Wired, "something that would make travel easier. Like a beam-me-up-Scotty device ..." would be the ideal Apple product for her. Also, "some sort of a saucy sex toy," would also be great, according to the 28-year-old teacher. "They could (make) a hologram of man appear," she added.
