

By: ~~Aphib2007~~Georgescu, Communications News Editor

Sony Ericsson's K800 Ferrari Limited Edition

Painted in a bright red color

Customers that are interested in getting a special Sony Ericsson K800i have somewhat of a choice. The phone was introduced in a silver version, dedicated to the Casino Royale movie, and recently, a Spider Man 3 limited edition has also been unveiled in Asia. Now, there's one more version of it to add to the list, which is the best looking so far. It's not really clear whether this phone is actually being sold this way, or someone decided to give it a make-over, being bored of the handset's black color. Either way, the result is quite nice, and it is among the first phones to come with a slapped on car logo and still look good. Unfortunately, the photos reveal only the back of the handset, painted in the bright and glossy, Ferrari-specific red color, with golden and black accents and the Ferrari logo on the protection cover of the camera. Aside from looks, there is absolutely no information regarding this phone. Of course, since it's a K800i with a different color scheme, the user can still expect to find the high-quality 3.2 megapixel camera, 3G capabilities and other nice multimedia dedicated features. There's no way to tell if this is a handset Sony Ericsson will make available for the masses, sell as a limited edition or not sell at all. But as far as its looks go, this is one special handset that will surely stand out in the crowd. And, while a Ferrari is so much harder to get, users could settle for a nice-looking Ferrari special edition phone, like this one.