

24 February 2006

By: Victor Mihailescu, Apple News Editor

The New Video iPod?

Or just another fake?

As expected, the rumors are spewing forth regarding the 'fun' new products Apple will unveil on the 28th. One of the most popular products which is expected is the 'real video iPod', which would be an iPod with the screen covering the entire front of it, the touch wheel being replaced by a virtual one through the use of touch sensitive technology. This rumor has been fueled by the patents Apple applied for some time ago, which described such a device, and now people are even reinterpreting Steve Jobs' words at the MacWorld Expo when he mentioned a secret iPod which was in the works, 'a 8 pounder with a 10-inch screen'. The latest and most interesting development is an image that was posted on the MacShrine site, depicting the new device. Verbatim from the MacShrine site: "This images was just sent to us. It follows the description provided by several rumor sites and also appears to be from the same factory where the iPod pictures last November were taken. Come on 28th! Update: The serial number appears to read "MB719Z/A" and the Chinese characters read 'This Side'."