

5 August 2006

By: Alex Vochin, Technology Editor

The Self-Destruct Button USB Hub

A SF-inspired device from ZariganiWorks.

Considering the huge number of USB hubs available on the market, it's pretty clear that the only way a new device of this type can enjoy some level of success is to have a very interesting design, since its basic function is shared by so many devices. And the device you're about to see really fits the profile, since it sports a very cool design, especially for the SF buffs. Thus, the Self Destruction Button USB, presented by GeekStuff4You and developed by ZariganiWorks, looks, as you can plainly see from the picture, like a self-destruct system from a SF movie, although its only real function is to host the 4 USB ports that can be found in its lower side. This very special USB hub measures 100 x 67 x 80 mm (quite small, which makes the quality of the details even more amazing), weighs 215 grams, and could be a very nice addition to your collection of weird/cool SF-inspired devices. We are just a few, but there are many of you, Softpedia users, out there. That's why we thought it would be a good idea to create an email address for you to help us a little in finding gadgets we missed. Interesting links are bound to be posted with recognition going mainly to those who submit. The address is .