What Should You Wear for a Google Job Interview?

The best dress code for a Google interview

Earlier this day, I wrote an article about a potential Google job quoting the newest member of the Reader team who sustained the life at the Googleplex is really a dream. Let's suppose that Google called you and invited you to an interview to talk about a potential job for the search giant. I believe this telephone call would thrill you so all the questions will suddenly appear: how should I talk, how to present myself, what should I wear? Although I believe it's better to be yourself, if you're curious what should you wear for a Google Job interview, then Wired Blogs Epicenter offers the answer.- Sales and operations people wear quality shirts, nice slacks or khakis, and Ecco shoes. You can get away with wearing Dockers.- Everyone else wears jeans, T-shirts, and Ugg boots.- Leave the Rolex at home.- Don't dress for the job you want to have, dress 30% above your level. More than that and it will look like you're trying too hard. First of all, I really think you should try being yourself without trying to lie or to impress the Google official. We both know that a Google Job is one of the biggest opportunities in a man's life so you should really try to give it your best. Although all the above statements are based on a fictional story, Google is currently hiring a lot of new experienced people so, if you think you're the man for a certain job opening presented by the company, you should apply soon. The Google Job page especially designed to recruit new and experienced people from every corner of the world, is available on this link.
