The emergency tool comprises both diagnosis and repair tools

Avira CIA Commander 2 recovery tool aims to offer users a tool for emergency access to Windows installations. Both in a comprehensive and immediate manner, CIA Commander 2 resolves data and system recovery related to machine failures. The latest product added to Avira's portfolio is a result of the datapol GmbH technology acquisition earlier this year, and is available as of last week for 399, 00 euros. "Digital threats are becoming more and more diverse, although the attacks are usually carried out specifically. It is therefore all the more important to have a comprehensive security concept that, in addition to preventive protection measures, also contains methods for back-up and disaster recovery", explains Tjark Auerbach, the CEO of Avira GmbH. "Our aim is to provide users with the relevant functions from one source. As with all Avira products, the Avira CIA Commander 2 can be quickly integrated in the IT infrastructure without impairing the performance of the systems." CIA Commander 2 recovery tool comes as a remedy to the diversified causes of computer crashes, from bluescreens, forgotten passwords, server and drive failures or viral compromising of systems. Marketed as a "friend indeed", the emergency tool comprises both diagnosis and repair tools. "If a system failure occurs, for example, the Recovery CIA Commander boots defective or no longer accessible Windows systems from a CD to a Windows-like, graphical user interface. This process is carried out within a few seconds of start-up and even retrieves information that you thought was lost forever. The software also takes control of user administration in an emergency. Based on a specially developed mini operating system, full access to all Microsoft file systems is possible, including the NTFS and the registry. In this way, passwords can be easily unblocked and overwritten or unknown passwords backed up or recovered. The scope of functions of the Avira CIA Commander 2 is extended by further tools such as the Services Manager, a detailed error log and a text editor as well as the possibility to back-up data on CD or DVD," stated Avira in a press release.
