

14 December 2006

By: Bogdan Popa, Security and Search Engines Editor

Yahoo Answers' First Birthday

The service is now one year old

Yahoo Answers is a service provided by Yahoo that allows you to post your questions on the official webpage of the solution, while other members of the community will write you answers, helping you to create an interactive discussion. Today, the company celebrates Yahoo Answers' first birthday, the service being now one year old, 12 months that marked a lot of important events. According to comScore, as the Yahoo Answers Team said, the service recorded about 16.6 millions users just in November 2006. The Yahoo Answers Team posted a message on their official blog to mention the way the company's employees are celebrating the anniversary, saying that users can join them in California for the birthday party. Gifts! Lots of 'em. If you're a Level Two and up, you can sign up to receive a thank you gift for sharing your knowledge with the world. Hats, mugs, fleeces, keychains, and stickers. Best of Answers. With millions of questions and answers, our team selected a few favorites that showcase how much we all know. As James Surowieki notes, many are smarter than a few. We're also having a party tonight here in California for local Yahoo! Answers users, and we've flown in 25 special guests - resourceful and knowledgeable users who've distinguished themselves through their extraordinary performance on Yahoo! Answers, including category leaders, featured users, and more. One of the most important events for Yahoo Answers in this year is the Oprah moment, the TV star that decided to post a question on the official webpage of the service to know the users' opinion about a donation that she made in her TV shows. If you have questions with tough answers, feel free to use Yahoo's service that is available on this link.