

26 April 2007

By: Bogdan Popa, Security and Search Engines Editor

Yahoo Toolbar included in Shockwave Player

Yahoo: We Need Your Help, for God's Sake!

Help Yahoo improve the Toolbar

Yahoo is that kind of company that wants to adapt its products to the users' needs by requiring them to make suggestions for the upcoming updates. Yahoo Toolbar is one of the products that must be improved with the users' required features because it is an add-on to Mozilla Firefox or Internet Explorer that provides instant access to Yahoo's services. Now, because the clients are rarely sending feedback messages, the giant portal tries to encourage them using several tricks. The first one was revealed today after the Yahoo Team posted a message on the official blog of the company to require suggestions from the users and ideas for the upcoming improvements. "No idea is a bad idea. OK, I don't believe that either. But if you think you've got a good one for Yahoo! Toolbar, please share it on our new Toolbar Suggestion Board. You can also visit the forum to read and rate other people's suggestions. The more votes a suggestion receives, the more likely it'll attract our attention. And who knows, you may even bump into real folks from the Toolbar team who will chat with you about the suggestions," the Yahoo Team posted on the official blog of the company. The Toolbar Suggestion Board is based on Suggestions and is working on a simple principle: after you publish it, it can be rated by other users of the service. After a certain amount of time, the suggestion with the biggest number of votes is analyzed by the company and who knows, maybe it will be implemented into the final product. If you want to download and install Yahoo Toolbar from Softpedia, you can click HERE for Internet Explorer or HERE for Mozilla Firefox.