Z530i in Pink Camouflage

The phone will come with a pair of Skullcandy HESH headphones.

Once in a while, every mobile phone manufacturer spills some pink colored paint on to the phone assembly line and instead of throwing them away, they decide to deliver them to the mobile market. I'm not saying this is a bad thing because there are people out there that even consider it a true color (remember what color was the dress that your girlfriend wore the last time you went for a night out and you will understand what I mean by this), but ... Why pink? Couldn't they accidentally spill a combination of black and silver so every man on the face of this planet will have another reason to buy a new shiny black or silver matching (sport) car to toy around with? No. Almost every time things go out of hand something PINK must happen!!! Joke apart, Sony Ericsson seems to have also spilled some pink on their phones because they have recently launched a revamped pink camouflaged Z530i that, unlike many of the other usual phones launched on the mobile market lately, comes with a pair of limited edition pink Skullcandy HESH headphones that feature 50 mm High Explosive power drivers and sound-boosting parabolic ear-cups to give the lucky girl wearing them a studio quality sound.. I suppose this is another reason why every female representative of our species that lives at the moment on Earth should love it. This "upgraded" Z530i also features a VGA camera, an MP3 player that goes along perfectly with the included pink headphones and wireless Bluetooth connectivity to be able to listen to your favorite songs on the same headphones without worrying about any dangling cables. The ones that will want to get their hands on it will have to pay 140 $, a pretty good price if one wants to make and keep its girlfriend happy.
